A GRAND MONUMENT

Dedication of the Childs-Drexel Home for Aged Printers.

AT COLORADO SPRINGS YESTERDAY

Geo. W. Childs, the Chief Founder, Present—A Grand Parade—Oration of Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire—His Eloquent Tribute to the Art Preservative and the Men Who Work at the Case.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo., May 12.—This is a gala day for Colorado Springs and the occasion most notable in the history of the city. To-day the Childs-Drexel home for printers was dedicated, it being also the sixty-third anniversary of the birth of Mr. Childs, one of the patrons of the home. The noted philanthropist and party reached here yesterday in three special trains. W. S. Cappeller, president of the national association, and many other well known editors were present in honor of the event.

It is estimated that during the hour of the parade over 10,000 people were upon the streets to witness the display. The home is the only institution of the kind in the world.

On arriving at the beautiful structure it was concluded on account of the immense multitude gathered to hold the ceremonies outside. After a brief prayer by Rev. James B. Gregg, who invoked a blessing of the Almighty upon the institution, Hon. J. L. Koutz, welcomed the visitors in behalf of Colorado. Governor Routt's brief remarks were well received and his conclusion Hon. Ira T. Sprague, mayor of Colorado Springs, delivered an address welcoming the visitors to the city.

The event of the day was the short address made by Mr. George W. Childs. When he made his appearance on the speakers' stand it was some time before he was able to proceed because of the deafening cheering and hearty welcome extended to him.

MR. CHILD'S SPEECH.

Mr. Childs said: LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:—I was not unnaturally embarrassed in addressing a company of such a distinguished and diversified representative character. I cannot express the deep sense of my appreciation of the honors conferred upon me. I am profoundly impressed by the generous welcome of the chief magistrate of this young, wealthy and vigorous commonwealth; of the chief magistrate of the affluent beautiful city and of the president of your chamber of commerce who have put aside the grave affairs of state and municipality and the exactions to give greeting to us who have come from long distances to assist in the dedication of this home. It was forty-one years ago that the International Typographical Union was established by and for the members of that honorable craft, whose intelligent minds and skillful hands have disseminated human thought throughout the world. The printers' unions have not only spread the light of education and reason over this vast continent; they have given to labor a higher dignity, a broader independence and all those qualities which render it of greatest worth. From boyhood I have been more or less intimately associated with members of the craft and knowing it so long and so well, I have naturally sympathized with it and what little I have been able to do to express my respect for it has honored me more for the doing it than the craft in the reception of it. It is not the printers who owe me gratitude; the indebtedness is mine. I regret that my associate, Mr. Drexel, is not here to-day in person to share with me the friendly warmth of your generous dealing for him who is here in spirit with me whose sympathy for all that is good and noble is so great as well as for myself.

Senator J. H. Gallinger, of New Hampshire, delivered the dedicatory oration.

THE DEDICATORY ADDRESS.

The following are extracts from the oration of Senator Gallinger:

More than 400 years after Gutenberg's death, there is erected here a home for the superannuated disciples of the first printer. In a sense it is a monument to his memory and a tribute paid by benevolence to his genius. In the care for his aged followers the nineteenth century honors him who, in a benighted age, lifted the veil which shut out the light of intelligence, and laid the foundation for the marvelous enlightenment of the present. There must be in printers' ink an inspiration to generosity and even prodigality, so few of the craft ever become rich. That fellow-feeling that makes all the world kin glows ever in the heart of the printer, opening his purse to the needy and his soul to the suffering. His couch is freely shared with a homeless craftsman, his case is at the service of the wanderer, and his last ration is fairly divided with the one who knows not where to get his daily bread. Nor is his bounty or his charity circumscribed by guild lines. Who so hospitable everywhere as a printer? Who so quickly touched by the appeal of the afflicted? Thrift may not be one of his virtues, but niggardliness is not one of his failings. His is to share generously with others. He has no isolated pleasures. His present is never burdened with the gloom of to-morrow. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof" is the creed that too often scantily clothes and feeds him and his family. Yet the world is the better for his coming. He has scattered smiles of gladness along his pathway.

The printer's case is the training school of some of the best thinkers of the age. The range of inquiry incited by it is boundless. It embraces all subjects. It is fettered by no restrictions. The contest is still going on between the advocates of a prescribed course of study in our colleges and those who favor elective studies, but there is no controversy over the curriculum of the printing office. Its English is the best. It must be correct; it is often classical. It may be poetical; it is always instructive.

THE PRINTER'S KNOWLEDGE.

It used to be said of the legal profession that its disciples must know everything, so as to be thoroughly equipped to try the varied causes of their clients. Is there anything within the ken of mankind that a printer may not be called upon to put into cold type? One day he is in close communion with the philosopher, another he is walking hand in hand with the scientist, another he is in lock-step with some noted instructor; again he is in touch with the editor in his endeavor to influence public opinion, and still again he is making present history and future statesmen as he fills up the forms of the Congressional Record. He often takes thought in the rough and dresses it in shape for the market. He gets in sympathy with the writer, and when allowed weaves out a finer texture than the author dreamed. He is in touch with the question of the hour, and is bred into familiarity with the history and standard writings of the past. He is schooled in judgment of human nature, and keeps in sympathy with the pulse of the people. Many an author would never be inflicted upon a long-suffering public if it were first submitted to the test of the man at the case. Manuscript that falls flat upon its easiness is not likely to create a furor in literature, incite a reform, or change the destiny of a state. He knows what will awaken a popular chord, and his discriminating criticism sometimes reaches the editor's desk.

The printer's case has been, and still is, a stepping-stone to positions of honor and trust. From it have sprung statesmen, philosophers, writers, thinkers, scholars, patriots and philanthropists. It has made itself felt in business affairs, in statecraft and in diplomacy through its graduates. They have moved the world at home, and they have not been without their influence abroad.

CHILD'S AND DREXEL.

The Childs-Drexel Home for Aged Printers, beneath whose hospitable roof we are to-day, is one of the noblest of modern charities. If one more familiar than I with the inception and progress of this great enterprise had not been selected to speak on that theme, I would gladly do so myself. But the work is done, and it is left for me only to speak in a general way of those under whose guiding hand this memorial has been reared. First, let us pay a brief word of tribute to the union printers, who so liberally contributed to their comparatively small means to the fund that at length became sufficient for the purposes of the enterprise. The contribution of each was small, but the aggregate made it possible for the larger contributions to become available, and thus the erection of this home became a possibility. Had not the printers come to the rescue, each one casting in his mite, very likely what is now an accomplished fact would be an unfulfilled purpose. To them, more than to any other instrumentally, belongs the honor in which we all share to-day.

But we have other and individual benefactors to be remembered in connection with this work. Mr. Anthony Joseph Drexel and Mr. George W. Childs, both of Philadelphia, originated the idea of this home, and large contributions from them laid the foundation of its success. They are benefactors in the truest sense, their gifts being numerous and widespread.

Mr. Drexel comes of an honored family, and occupies a high place as a banker and philanthropist. His benefactions have been exceedingly liberal, and the Drexel Institute in Philadelphia, devoted to the work of instruction in the arts, sciences and practical handicrafts, stands as an enduring monument to a name that will long be cherished in the minds and hearts of the American people. It was fortunate for this home that his generous heart was touched and his generous purse was opened.

In fit connection with Mr. Drexel—in the central figure in the group of our benefactors—we recall the name of one of America's greatest and best men—Mr. George W. Childs—who is at present with us at this moment, to receive our cordial and grateful acknowledgments and our congratulations on his birthday anniversary. Long may he be spared to celebrate other birthdays, and to witness the result of his large and timely bounty. Of him it may be truly said:

"How'er it be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good;
True hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

To trace the career of this man would be a labor of love, did time permit it to be done. Not only in America, but in Europe as well, his name is a household word, and his bounty has reached far beyond the limits of his own country. This is not his first gift to union printers, as the cemetery near Philadelphia, known as the "Printers' cemetery," Woodlands, is one of his numerous benefactions—a beautiful spot, where now repose the remains of many of our fellow-craftsmen.

A NOBLE MONUMENT.

Surely no nobler monument to any man—no nobler monument to any man—could have been devised, nor one better calculated to secure for him an enviable and delightful remembrance in the hearts of those whom he has benefited long after the costliest cenotaphs or the most magnificent mausoleums have crumbled into dust. To you, members of the craft, it is an invaluable treasure, and the name of your illustrious friend will henceforth be inscribed upon your rolls and upon your hearts as one of the greatest and most honored benefactors of the age.

Above all and beyond all this home is a tribute to the worth of the craft and to the benevolence, development of the age. Here will be gathered many of the bright minds of the "art preservative." Here, after the active possibilities of life have departed, will come veterans from the ranks, to recount around the hospitable fireside and amid the glow and beauty of this most favored spot the experiences of the case, the printing press, the pen, the scissors and the paste pot. Here will wit flow and philosophy reign supreme. Here will the stories of the printing office be repeated, and the achievements of the great men of the profession be discussed. Here will grave questions of statecraft find intelligent disputants. Here will the burden of misfortune be lifted, sorrows mitigated, suffering ameliorated and the sunset days of many brave and good men be rendered serene and happy.

May Heaven's choicest blessings rest upon its founders, its officers and its inmates, and may this home, so auspiciously opened to-day, take deservedly high rank among the great eleemosynary institutions of this great nation.

THE WONDERFUL SUCCESS.

It should be in Every House.

J. B. Wilson, 371 Clay St., Sharpshooter, Pa., says he will not be without Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds, that it cured his wife who was threatened with pneumonia when an attack of "La Grippe" after various other remedies and several physicians had done her no good. Robert Barber, of Cooksport, Pa., claims Dr. King's New Discovery has done him more good than anything he ever used for Lung Trouble. Nothing like it. Try it. ## FINANCE AND TRADE.

The Features of the Money and Stock Markets.

NEW YORK, May 12.—Money on call at 1 1/2 per cent; last loan 2 per cent; offered at 2 per cent. Prime mercantile paper 3 1/4 per cent. Sterling exchange quiet but steady at $1 80/100. Sales of stocks were 229,486 shares.

The stock market to-day was still extremely narrow, notwithstanding the fact that the dealing extended to a large number of stocks, for the interest was centered in a few shares, which were affected by special causes. The improved feeling in London was not apparent to-day, and the operations of the foreign market, including the arbitrage houses, were insignificant. The general market was heavy at times under the influence of the bears on a few stocks—Hocking Valley, Manhattan and some industrials principally. Later they recovered most of their losses, but became weak, and the market closed quiet but weak at the lowest prices of the day in most cases, though the list as a rule, was only slightly below the level of the opening prices.

Railroad bonds active. Sales $2,240,000.

Government and state bonds dull and firm.
